St. Mary's Adult Faith Formation team welcomes Fr. Anthony Corcoran as he presents 'The Voice of Christianity in the Former Soviet Union' on Sunday, July 23rd at 11:30 a.m. in the Parish Center-727 S Travis St. Sherman, TX

Fr. Anthony will introduce us to the Catholic Church in Russia and explain the challenges of serving a country where the majority of Russians consider themselves to be Orthodox Christians. Father Anthony will share stories of the people and places he has experienced since arriving in Siberia in 1997, where he was a missionary Priest for 12 years. For the past 8 years, Fr. Anthony has served as the regional superior for all Jesuits working in the Russian Republic and surrounding countries. Upon his return to Russia in August, he will be the Director of the only Catholic school in Siberia.

Remembrance Mass for Children / Misa Conmemorativa por Niños

Saturday, August 12, 2017 10:30 AM - 12:00 PM

St. Patrick Catholic Church, 9643 Ferndale Rd, Dallas, TX 75238

This bilingual Mass for the diocese will be celebrated by Bishop Greg Kelly with Fathers Josef Vollmer-König and Jason Cargo with the Cathedral Children's Choir. The Mass will include a special blessing for parents of children lost before birth by miscarriage, stillbirth or abortion, or for any other reason after birth. Parents will also be invited to participate in a white rose procession and to add their child(ren) to a Book of Remembrance to be held in prayer by the Sisters of Life. (Participation in any aspect of the event is voluntary.) Following Mass, light refreshments will be served. For more information, contact Susan Platt, 214-392-7545 or splatt@prolifedallas.org

La caridad consiste en ser de buen corazón, pero la justicia consiste en algo más. La capacidad individual de compartir los sentimientos de otros es buena y virtuosa, pero no cambia necesariamente las estructuras sociales, económicas y políticas, que inmolan injustamente a ciertas personas y privilegian indebidamente a otras. Necesitamos ser justos y buenos de corazón, pero necesitamos también tener una política justa y buena.

Jim Wallis, hablando más específicamente sobre el racismo, lo dice así: Cuando protestamos de que no estamos implicados en sistemas injustos diciendo cosas como “tengo amigos negros”, necesitamos desafiarnos a nosotros mismos: No es solamente lo que hay en nuestros corazones lo que está en disputa; es también lo que está en el corazón de la política pública. Podemos tener amigos negros; pero, si nuestras políticas son racistas, no hay aún justicia en la tierra. La sola buena voluntad individual no siempre contribuye a que un sistema les resulte justo a todos.

Y eso está precisamente en este punto donde vemos la crucial distinción entre caridad y justicia, entre ser de buen corazón como individuos e intentar asegurar, como comunidad, que nuestros mismos sistemas sociales, económicos y políticos no sean la causa de las mismas cosas a las que tratamos de responder en caridad. ¿Qué es lo que causa la pobreza, el racismo, la disparidad económica, la falta de acceso justo a la educación y al cuidado de la salud, y la irresponsabilidad con la que frecuentemente tratamos la naturaleza? Las actitudes individuales, cierto. Pero la injusticia es también el resultado de las políticas sociales, económicas y políticas que, cualesquiera que sean sus otros méritos, ayudan a producir las condiciones que causan abundante pobreza, desigualdad, racismo, privilegio y falta de serio compromiso por el aire que respiramos.

A la mayoría de nosotros -sospecho yo- le es familiar una historia que es usada frecuentemente para distinguir entre caridad y justicia. Ocurre de esta manera: Había una ciudad edificada a lo largo de un río, pero situada alrededor de un recodo, de modo que la gente del pueblo podía ver sólo esa parte del río que bordeaba su ciudad. Un día, unos pocos niños estaban jugando junto al río cuando vieron cinco cuerpos flotando sobre el agua. Fueron rápidamente a ayudar, y la gente de la ciudad a la que alertaron hizo lo que cualquier persona responsable haría en esa situación. Se ocuparon de los cuerpos. Sacándolos del río, encontraron que dos estaban muertos, y los enterraron. Tres estaban aún vivos. Uno era un niño, al que rápidamente encontraron un hogar adoptivo; otro era una mujer seriamente enferma, a la que ingresaron en un hospital; el último era un joven, y le encontraron un empleo y un lugar donde vivir.

Pero la historia no acabó ahí. Al siguiente día, aparecieron más cuerpos y, de nuevo, la gente del pueblo respondió como anteriormente. Se ocuparon de los cuerpos. Enterraron a los muertos, colocaron a los enfermos en los hospitales, encontraron hogares adoptivos para los niños, y empleos y lugares donde vivir para los adultos. Y así continuó eso durante años, de modo que ocuparse de los cuerpos que encontraban cada día llegó a ser el rasgo normal de sus vidas y se convirtió en parte de la vida de sus iglesias y su comunidad. Unos pocos motivaron altruistamente a la gente, incluso lo hicieron el trabajo de su vida para cuidar de esos cuerpos. Pero... -y este es el punto- nadie fue nunca al río para ver de dónde y por qué razones continuaban apareciendo cada día esos cuerpos en el río. Simplemente, continuaron de buen corazón y generosos en su respuesta a los cuerpos que encontraban su camino a su ciudad.

La lección es suficientemente clara: Una cosa (necesaria, buena y cristiana) es ocuparse de los indigentes cuerpos que encontramos a la puerta de nuestra casa, y otra cosa (también necesaria, buena y cristiana) es ir contra corriente para intentar cambiar las cosas que están causando que esos cuerpos estén en el río. Esa es la diferencia entre la caridad de buen corazón y actuar en favor de la justicia social.

- Sometimes while praying the Psalms, I'm caught looking quite uncomfortably into a mirror reflecting back to me my own seeming dishonesty. For example, we pray these words in the Psalms: My soul longs for you in the night. ... Like a deer that yearns for flowing streams, so my soul longs for you my God. ... For you alone do I long! For you alone do I thirst!

If I'm honest, I have to admit that a lot of times, perhaps most times, my soul longs for a lot of things that do not seem of God. How often can I honestly pray: For you, God, alone do I long. For you alone do I thirst! In my restlessness, my earthy desires, and natural instincts, I long for many things that don't appear very God-focused or heavenly at all. I suspect that's true for most of us for good parts of our lives. Rare is the mystic who can say those prayers and mean them with her full heart on any given day.

But human desire is a complex thing. There's a surface and there's a depth, and in every one of our longings and motivations we can ask ourselves this: What am I really looking for here? I know what I want on the surface, here and now, but what am I ultimately longing for in this?

This discrepancy, between what we're aware of on the surface and what's sensed only in some dark, inchoate way at a deeper level, is what's captured in a distinction philosophers make between what's explicit in our awareness and what's implicit within it. The explicit refers to what we are aware of consciously ("I want this particular thing!"); whereas the implicit refers to the unconscious factors that are also in play but of which we are unaware. These we only sense, vaguely, in some unconscious part of our soul.

For instance, Karl Rahner, who was fond of this distinction and who puts it to good use in his spirituality, offers us this (crass though clear) example of the distinction between the explicit and the implicit within our motivation and desires. Imagine this, he says: A man, lonely and restless and depressed on a Saturday night, goes to a singles' bar, picks up a prostitute and goes to bed with her. On the surface his motivation and desire are as undisguised as they are crass. He's not longing for God in his bed on this particular night. Or is he?

On the surface, of course he's not, his desire seems purely self-centered and the antithesis of holy longing. But, parsed out to its deepest root, his desire is ultimately a longing for divine intimacy, for the bread of life, for heaven. He's longing for God at the very depth of his soul and at the very depth of his motivation, except he isn't aware of this. Raw desire for immediate gratification is all that he's consciously aware of at this time, but this doesn't change his ultimate motivation, of which this is a symptom. At a deeper level, of which he is not consciously aware, he's still longing for the bread of life, for God alone. His soul is still that of a deer, longing for clear flowing streams, except that on this given night another stream is promising him a more immediate tonic that he can have right now.

Recently I taught a course on the spirituality of aging and dying. Stealing a line from Goethe's poem, Holy Longing, I entitled the course poetically: Insane for the Light. In a term paper, one of the students, a woman, reflecting on her own journey towards aging and dying, wrote these words:

"And then last night I began to think that dying is making love with God, the consummation after a lifetime of flirtations, encounters, meetings in the dark, and constant yearning, longing, and sense of loneliness that does make one insane for the light. I reflected on the Song of Songs and thought that it could be an analogy of how I see dying, not necessarily as the body's disintegration and demise, but rather as the entire transition that I was born destined to make. I think of my life as a love story with its ups and downs like any love story, but always going in the direction of God with the finality of death being the wedding of the love between God and myself after a lifetime betrothal."

She puts it as well as Rahner and the philosophers, though her words are more direct. She too, in analyzing her desire, points out there are levels, explicit and implicit, conscious and unconscious.

Yes, our lives, with all their tensions, restlessness, youthful immaturities, adult depressions, cold lonely seasons, times of doubt, times of desperation, breakdowns, and occasional irresponsible exuberance will surely be marked by flirtations and encounters that seem to exhibit desires that are not for the bread of life. But, they are, ultimately, and one day they will find and know their full consummation.
